TEACHING INTERESTS

My primary teaching interests are related to interpersonal communication and focus specifically on family and relational communication. Courses on those topics as well as on emotion and social cognition are of special interest to me. In addition, I teach introductory research methods and have taught a variety of basic undergraduate courses.

RESEARCH INTERESTS

My current research interests focus primarily on how human communication creates and reflects the emotions and interpretive processes that occur in intimate relationships. I am concerned with how people in close relationships talk, how they interpret their interactions, and how their conversations affect their feelings about, and their perceptions of, their relationships.
